

Over the years there have been many sightings of luminous objects shooting across the surface of the Moon under seemingly intelligent control, indicating there is continuous activity in the lunar skies. Numerous NASA images show too there is plenty of evidence for artificial structures on its surface, reminding us of the kind of thing we've already seen on Mars. This suggests we may well be just as likely to find inhabited buildings on the Moon, as ancient ruins.

Do Covert Agencies Control Alien and UFO Affairs?

What is to be done with this state of affairs? On the one hand we have this massive body of evidence from both highly credible witnesses and official photographic and digital images affirming the highly probable existence of extraterrestrial craft, buildings, and artefacts - and on the other hand, a completely unmoved and unresponsive government and space agency, denying that anything of any serious note or scientific interest is happening or has been discovered at all. It is absolutely incredible.

Clearly, the reality must be that someone somewhere is struggling to know what to do with this information, and perhaps everyone is avoiding dealing with it, for the consequences of releasing knowledge of such matters to the world will be enormous and paradigm-shattering. There is strong evidence too that, due to severe compartmentalization within hierarchal structures that control the flow of information, knowledge, and control of alien matters may have been gradually siphoned off to covert, clandestine agencies that may not be under the direction of legitimate government but which serve some other goal.

Dr Steven Greer from the Disclosure Project has compiled evidence that links prominent U.S. hi-tech companies and defence contractors such as Bechtel, Boeing/McDonnell Douglas, Lockheed Martin, SAIC, BDM, Northrop Grumman and Wackenhut with the development of technologies derived from the back-engineering of crashed alien spacecraft recovered by the military.<sup>94</sup>

Former U.S. Army Sergeant, Clifford Stone confirmed the existence of such military units specifically tasked to secure these downed extraterrestrial spacecraft:<sup>95</sup>

Under [Project] "Moon Dust" and under "Blue Fly", we have recovered alien debris, not of this Earth . . . I was involved in those types of operations to retrieve crashed ET objects . . . You would go ahead and deploy as though it was a nuclear accident. There are procedures already established on nuclear or biological or chemical accidents . . . those same procedures are utilized when you do a recovery or extraction of a crashed ET spacecraft.

With such an extraordinary situation in operation where military projects exist specifically to recover extraterrestrial craft, this suggests that if the U.S. government is not in the loop regarding the existence of such craft and what is being done with them, then the door has certainly been left open for someone to exploit these alien vehicles and their priceless technology. If the military is in control of recovering the crashed (or targeted) UFOs, are the private aerospace corporations handling the research, development and commercial exploitation of them?

Yes, 'commercial exploitation'. The business of grabbing alien spacecraft for profit would be lucrative beyond imagination. For if we are talking about the superior, technologies used by extraterrestrial civilizations that enable them to traverse between solar systems, zip around our planet at speeds impossible for conventional aircraft, as well as cloak and disappear at will as has often been reported, then their technology is going to be worth a hell of a lot to those Earth companies seeking to dominate their markets.

However, it goes without saying that the acquisition of extraterrestrial vehicles and their advanced capabilities, would be of paramount interest first and foremost to the military. But who would, in turn, still require the skills and expertise of the corporate defence contractors - those who normally build their weaponry and aircraft - to develop any such newly-discovered alien technologies into useful applications.

An insight into such an industrial arrangement is provided by Colonel Phillip J. Corso, Sr., U.S. Army (ret.), an Army intelligence officer who was on the staff of President Eisenhower's National Security Council. He also worked in research and development and revealed that advanced technological information recovered from extraterrestrial spacecraft was deliberately fed to commercial corporations:<sup>96</sup>

We gave information about the ET technologies out and insisted they [the corporations] take the patents. But also we put a little bit of a requirement: Feed it back to us, the competitive edge of the Army - take the patents, make all the money you want - but give it to the American people and give it to the world.

So it would seem from this statement that the companies took the technology, developed it, gave some advanced capability back to the military for their own projects, and then turned it into a product for sale to the world. Seems like a win-win situation.

Chapter 5: The Alien Connection

But around this time, President Eisenhower was becoming deeply concerned by his lack of control of this 'military-industrial complex' that was growing from the exploitation of alien technology, as we previously saw in his final address to the nation. What was it that worried him?

Did the corporations start holding back some of their discoveries derived from the ET technology, perhaps not sharing with their military gift-horses all of their breakthroughs? Did they no longer wish to wait for piecemeal handouts, but instead became proactive in seeking ET technology for their own corporation's explicit benefit and control? Taking whatever steps were necessary, in their eyes, to jealously guard and secure their extraterrestrial prizes?

Over fifty years have passed since Eisenhower's warning to America and who knows what has transpired since then regarding this situation. Today, however, there seems to be a quagmire of interwoven secrecy agendas that are in competition with each other, making it difficult to unravel and discern who exactly controls this highly classified sector that exists somewhere in the USAP world (Unacknowledged Special Access Program), deeply buried and untraceable.

There also seems to be a movement afoot by higher echelons of the military and intelligence community, suggesting they are in opposition to these covert programs and who want the secrecy ended. This suggests the military may indeed have somehow lost control of that technology and want to rectify the situation, although the public has yet to be informed about what they were even doing with ET technology way back then and how they got it.

A lot of catching up to do regarding how this history has unfolded over recent decades, but I would guess that 'planetary defence' was top of their list back in the 1940s-50s and if that security has somehow been put in jeopardy by groups that now have superior technology to the military . . . well, a complex and dangerous state of affairs may be imagined to be at the heart of all of this.

To be honest, I don't have complete answers yet to the dark, foreshadowing questions that embroil this portentous matter, but I hope in the near future to be able to throw some light upon it. However, to discover the truth, we depend on people coming forward to share with the world what they know, and until some kind of disclosure from government happens that is the only way forward. If you know something important, we need you.

For now, let's imagine for a moment just how these global business corporations might truly react if ET turned up tomorrow with some far-reaching technology. To offer the human race some new, miraculous devices that might replace all of their outdated products.

I think there will be two chief concerns that might worry our global business magnates:

1. A visit from benevolent ET's - who, on observing our human health and planetary ecological problems caused by lack of food, dependency on prescription drugs, etc., and our use of fossil fuels for energy, might, for example, offer humanity free energy devices, food replicators, and full health restoration modules for every person and home on the planet, and at a stroke, wipe out starvation from our world as well as our dependency on expensive medicines, oil, gas and electric.

Such a scenario would completely freak out all of the pharmaceutical and energy companies.

2. A visit from opportunistic ET's – who, on observing how our limited planetary resources were controlled by a handful of global corporations, decided to make a trade deal with one or two of them to supply advanced technology - that would freak out all of their political and industrial competitors.

So, if you have a bunch of boys and girls who don't want to lose their profits from their oilfields and drugs, and who also don't want to risk others getting hold of ET technology that might put them out of business forever, what would they in all likelihood do?

Well, with regard to the benevolent ET's offer to the entire human race, some of our more enlightened corporate leaders may of course choose to humbly acquiesce and embrace the whole wonderful change that such a beneficial gift from ET would bring to the Earth and humanity, and help us herald in a new age of prosperous health and a clean, renewable and limitless energy supply.

But given the level of self-serving greed and arrogance displayed by the majority of humanity's global corporations, most would surely view such a benevolent act only as a massive assault on their corporate profits and control, and as such would more likely embrace the business-orientated ET visitor out looking for trade. Then, alien world-changing technologies could be purchased or licensed perhaps for exclusive manufacturing and distribution rights on the Earth.

Failing a trade deal with ET, they would probably take steps to block such interference and 'aggressively acquire' the very technology the ET's want to give us for free, as fast as possible and by any means at their disposal, before their competitors do.

Makes you wonder what the Star Wars orbiting weaponry programme was really all about back in the '80s. How about targetting and bringing down spacecraft, from friendly visiting peoples from other worlds, so as to recover and steal their technology?

Would make a cracking movie Mr Spielberg...

Is it really possible that secret groups in league with corporations and the military are operating outside of government control and supervision and pursuing their own agendas? If so, it behoves our true world leaders to expose and reveal what they are up to, and what is really happening on this Earth.

Apollo 14 astronaut Edgar Mitchell, sums up the seriousness of the situation:<sup>97</sup>

Whatever activity is going on to the extent that it is a clandestine group, a quasi-government group, a quasi-private group, it is without any type of, as far as I can tell, of high-level government oversight. And that is a great concern.

And now, with this perspective, we might understand how and why the search for and discovery of possible alien civilizations on Mars and elsewhere in our solar system - indeed anything that involves extraterrestrial intelligence - has been ordained as a very highly-classified, secret subject, the consequence of which we would see as a total blackout on public research and discussion by official science bodies such as NASA.

And this is essentially what we have today.

Well, I suppose in a world where profit-driven success dominates virtually everything that moves upon the Earth we should not really be surprised at the thought
